

THE HEART OF GIVING: JEREMY'S STORY

*To be loved like that...
that will always be the greatest gift of my life.*

Jeremy was the kind of person who made everyone feel welcome the moment they met him.

He was friendly, warm, and a steady presence in the lives of those who knew him. With his big red beard, sky blue eyes, and even bigger smile, he had a way of drawing people in. Whether it was a conversation, a hug, or simply being there when someone needed him, Jeremy made an impact that lasted far beyond the moment.

To his wife, he was everything.

The two met at work, and over time built a life filled with love, laughter, and the kind of everyday moments that mean the most. Sitting on the porch, going for drives, trying new food, camping, or standing at the front of a concert singing and dancing together, those are the moments she misses most.

"He was my very best friend," she said. "I miss just talking to him."

She describes him as someone who never made her feel unloved.

"He was my biggest fan. I always knew he'd be there to catch me when I fell and cheer me on. To be loved like that... that will always be the greatest gift of my life."

That love extended to everyone around him.

Jeremy found joy in music, in bringing people together, and in caring for others. He loved creating playlists, attending concerts and festivals, and hosting gatherings for friends and family. No matter the setting, he made people feel at home.

Jeremy valued family, honesty, hard work, and integrity. He showed his care for others in the way he lived each day, always ready to lend a hand, offer support, or bring people together. He found joy in entertaining, feeding people, and spending time with friends and family.

Today, his legacy continues in the lives he helped shape.

"He raised our children into good, honest, caring people," his wife said. "Our friends and family continue to get together regularly to eat, to entertain, to keep doing what he thought was so important: being together and living."

Even in loss, that spirit of giving remains.

Although donation wasn't something they had discussed in depth, Jeremy had always been someone who gave to others. As his wife reflected on the decision, it felt like a natural extension of who he was.